THE ADVANCEMENT OF MUSIC IN ENLIGHTENMENT ENGLAND

Benjamin Cooke and the Academy of Ancient Music

TIM EGGINTON

Central to this group of musical thinkers was Benjamin Cooke, respected in his day as a composer, teacher, organist and theorist.

THE SCORING OF EARLY CLASSICAL CONCERTOS, 1750-1780

RICHARD MAUNDER

The period 1750-80 was a time when the concerto was evolving from the baroque version, typically played one-to-a part, towards the later, more 'orchestral' style. At the same time ideas about form were changing, as the Vivaldian ritornello pattern metamorphosed into the concerto-sonata form used by Mozart and his contemporaries. This book is organized on geographical lines, and there is a detailed discussion of the music itself and of the original parts as evidence of the performance practice of the period.
